A HIGH-TONED BURGLAR.

The Unremantic Ending of a School-Boy's Elopemont Scheme.

A Cleveland special of the 2d says:
A dispatch was received this evening from the Chief of Police at Erie stating that a young man named Oscar Smith had been arrested at an early hour Thursday morning, having in his possession a lot of goods that had been stolen by him from the hardware firm of Parsons & Bowyer, of that city. Later developments have placed a most sensational feature upon the arrest. The young man, who is now in jail, turns out to be E. T. Pierce, a son turns out to be E. T. Pierce, a son of N. A. Pierce, of Republic street, one of Cleveland's best-known citizens. and a prominent insurance and real ent. It seems that early on Thursday morning a report was made that the hardware-store mentioned had been broken into and several revolvers, knives, &c., stolen. A passer-by stated that he had seen a young man in the of Cleveland, near the place at mid-night. A detective, accompanied by an officer, went to the hotel where Pierce was registered and called at his room. He refused to admit them, and they broke open the door, discovering Pierce standing in the middle of the recen with a drawn sword in one hand and a seven-shooter revolver in the other. He was disarmed and taken to jail. At the station he gave his true name, and in explaining his act said that he was a somnambulist, and had been actuated by some strange influence to do the deed. He also said that he had run away from school at Cleveland and came to Erie to get married. The young lady whom he was expecting was Miss Nellie Bishop, of Cleveland, who had promised to meet him at Eric that day. Telegrams were sent to Pierce's father, who left this sent to Pierce's father, who left this evening for Erie. He said that the escapade of his son had come upon him so suddenly that he could not realize what had been done. The boy had been brought up in every luxury, and every wish had been gratified. He had sent him to the Brook's School, from which he had been absent for two days, but it was thought that he was away visiting a companion. The young lady who was to be a party to the elopement is quite beautiful, but scarcely fifteen years of age and the idol of her parents. She was seen this evening, and declares that she did not intend to clope at all.

THE SIEGE OF THE CAPE.

and are Dispersed.

A Paris special says: The Anarchist meeting on the Place de l'Opera this evening resolved itself into an attack on the Cafe de la Paix. At half-past 6, the hour fixed for the meeting, there were a few thousand loungers in the Place de l'Opera itself. The space near the Edon Theatre adjoining had during the afternoon been occupied by several hundred troops—very wisely, however, kept out of sight. The police, which was massed at various strategie points in the neighborhood, also avoided making themselves conspicuous. At 7 o'clock seven or eight thousand people at the utmost were in front of the Opera. Not one in a hundred was a genuine workman. No attempt was apparently made to organize a demonstration, and the zelf-styled Auarchists consistently amused themselves with senseless hooting and quarrelling with passing cabmen, who gave much better than they got, and with a general obstraction of travel. As night fell without a sign of the police they grew belder, Ultimen Lieboune, the famous uniet and theatrical manager, hile had effected an entrance organged in hostilities with a of officers ainping their handy.

THE FIGHTING BOY.

Income of the late Mr. Grimston, whose as described in the serious of the late Mr. Grimston, known as "Bob Grimston," there are plenty of martial passages. "Mills" at Eton and Harrow in those days, as at Rugby in Mr. Hughes's time, were quite formally conducted. "Knoen" were given to the combatants by the seconds, sponges were ready to be thrown up—even brandy, we fear, was occasionally supplied to provide a little Batavian valor. Now—a fight is an extremely rare thing, only occurs among very small boys, and is quite informal. If bullying has become as decadent as fighting, then the decline of pugilism can hardly be mourned. But a boy's chance of punishing a bully often lays in his fists, or in the fists of his big brother, and so the struggle for existence took this rather brutal shape in the fourth form. It is probable that much of the fighting was imitative; that it came from emulation of contemporary growa-up heroes. In the old wars, from the American contests to Waterloe, whole generations of boys grew up full of military spirit. Fighing was than part of the business of England, unless England was to see all Europe crushed and dominated by France. Boys, too, became more militant than usual even, which is saying a good deal. As the evolutionists assure us, boys are passing, mentally and morally, through the savage stage of culture. They show this in their queer customs and self-made absurd laws. An American scholar lately published the land laws which have been evolved by a country school for the regulation of favorite hunting-grounds and spots fertile in wild flowers. These laws were much of a level with the customs which gov often do we hear old felle which have been evolved by a country school for the regulation of favorite hunting-grounds and spots fertile in wild flowers. These laws were much on a level with the customs which govern Australian nomad tribes. In the cruelty which is the most unhappy element in the boy's character "before the weather than the boy's character before the weather than the boy's character to be fore the weather than the weather ment in the boy's character "before he grows to pity," there, too, we trace the savage. A boy's sense of honor and stoicism are worthy of a red In-dian, though this sense of honor in the victim, his determination "never to tell," make bullying possible. Well, in a character thus developing, the ad-miration of martial valor must inevita-bly have a large place. The youngest children, led by General Jane, the nurse, like "playing at soldiers." As the combative spirit is, by nature's own design, part of the boyish composition, Both Sir Charles Wilson's and Lord Charles Bereford's steamers were fired upon by heavy riverain batteries. There are a large number of Turkish and Arab officers with the Mahdi. The black recruits are drilled by fugitives from Arabi's army, and the Mahdi's artillery is worked by Turkish Topskis, who are held to be the best marksmen in the world.

The path grows steeper as we advance, for we are making a short cut over the shoulder of the mountain, and so we struggle up in single file, with occasional halts to breathe the horses, until, rounding an extremely rugged corner where some caution has to be above in passing we find ourselves at shown in passing, we find ourselves at the top of a steep grassy slope leading down to the green valley of Sveti Petka-Monastery. Some maize-fields tempt the sportsmen of the party to wander from the track in search of partridges, but evening is coming on, and we have still several miles to go before reaching our halting place. After a short rest in the courtyard of the monastery to allow our pack-horses a chance of catching us up, during which we are much amused by the determined attacks upon our dogs those of us who are rash enough to try the paprikas will remember for many a day that Europeans cannot boast the leathery toughness of Bulgarian mouths and throats.

They were, however, carried in a contrary direction, and at nightfall were carried rapidly out to sea. The aeronauts endeavored to attract the attention of some vessels they saw beneath them, but failing in this, M. Dubois deemed it prudent to throw out more ballast, so as to secure a high ascent. All the provisions they were provided with were some sandwiches, biscuits, two flasks of brandy, and some water. When merning dawned they found themselves far away out at sea. The greater part of Sunday they were over themselves far away out at sea. The greater part of Sunday they were over the sea, but as dusk set in they were delighted to find themselves being carried towards land. Yesterday morning they found themselves passing rapidly over a town, which they believed to be Folkestone, and they descended, as has been stated, near Bromley.
